WISE ACRE WILEY

GET THAT GOLD

Three weeks had passed since Centerville had learned the big news. The governor of the State had granted Jim Platt a full pardon restoring to him all his civil rights as a citizen. He had been convicted of a felony in that he and others unknown, had held up the Deadwood Coach and stolen the amount of $25,000 in twenty dollar gold coins. He had only served three months of his sentence when he had been freed. All kinds of rumors were flying around Centerville.

"They say he saved the warden's life in a jail break," declared Bill Hoffman, owner of the Centerville Livery Establishment. "I never believed that Jim was really guilty of holding up that stage."

"My uncle in Tombstone wrote me that the Prince Albert Kid went to the governor and asked for a pardon for Jim Platt. That means the famous law man must have known an innocent man was behind jail bars for a crime he didn't commit," proclaimed Mike Dwyer, owner of the Silver Top Mine. "My uncle knows what is happening so I believe him."

"Not the way I heard it," contradicted Bob Atkins. "They never found a cent of that loot. So maybe they are letting him go. Give a fellow enough rope and he'll hang himself. Jim hid the gold in a cave. Only he knows where it is. Some day he will go for the gold and that's when they'll get him. Back again behind jail bars. I never liked Jim anyway."

Thursday morning, Jed Harper rode into town with bigger news. His first stop was at the sheriff's office. He didn't even get off his horse as he shouted the news at the top of his lungs.

"Jim Platt is headed this way. He's the only passenger in the coach. Had a broken axle and they were delayed at Parkstown. Ought to be here in about three hours at the latest."

The sheriff heard the news and so did a lot of other folks. Sheriff Ben Corning knew there would be a lot of trouble ahead.

"Better ride out and tell the news to Ed Marvell. Then you and I go on duty around the clock. We don't want a killing to take place. I guess if I were Jim Platt, first man I would head for would be Ed Marvell."

Deputy Tod Harfnett rode his brown stallion at full speed. A half hour's ride brought him to a large cabin where Ed Marvell and his wife, Tess lived. The wife was outside the cabin when the deputy arrived.

"Is Ed inside?" asked the deputy. "Got some right important news to tell him."

"Come on in and have a good hot cup of coffee," invited Mrs. Marvell. "Always have a pot on the stove. Then you can tell the news to my husband."

The deputy followed Mrs. Marvell inside the cabin. She gave him a cup of coffee which he quickly drank.

"Could I speak to your husband alone?" he asked.

"Whatever you have to say, you can say it now," replied Ed Marvell. "And if you want to tell me that Jim Platt is headed for town, I figured that would come sooner or later."

"You took the words right out of my mouth," jested the deputy. "Just be careful. Keep your gun belt on every time you go out of the cabin and head for town, but don't use your gun unless Jim tries to go for you."

Finishing that warning, the deputy mounted his horse and rode away. Tess looked right into her husband's eyes.

"When you swore on the witness stand that Jim Platt boasted he would have a lot of money and the easiest way to get it was to hold up the stage, did you tell the truth?" she demanded.

"Hi Ross was with me when Jim Platt uttered those words," her husband replied. "He backed me up. Unfortunately Hi was killed in that mine explosion. What reason would I have to lie?"

"I believe you," said his wife. "Be careful. I can see that Jim Platt would hate you for what you said in court, but it doesn't make sense to me that he would come back just to kill you. They would hang him for that."

"I agree with you," replied her husband. "I'll be careful. The first move is up to Jim Platt."

The broken axle of the coach had been repaired and the driver was again in his seat. At the side of the coach was a powerful horse. On it was mounted the most famous man of the West. His Prince Albert Coat was known to every law officer as a sign of help. Around his hips were a full cartridge belt and two powerful Colt .45's with pearl handles.

"Be careful," warned the Prince Albert Kid. "You are human bait. We must get the real criminals. Do just what I told you."

"I have too much at stake to make a mistake now," replied Jim Platt. "I must prove to the world that I didn't hold up the coach. Believe me, I am grateful to you and the governor for this chance."

"We know you are innocent," said the famous man of the West. "But we must catch the real criminals."

When the stage arrived at Centerville, there were many curious people on hand to watch the lone passenger dismount. A young girl with her hair tied in a knot pushed her way to the coach. She faced Jim Platt. There was quiet as he looked at the girl to whom he had been engaged.

"Hello, Mary Louise," was his greeting. "Good to be back again."

She took him in her arms and kissed him. That did a lot to break the tension. He hadn't counted on this turn of events. Then she put her arm into his and gave an order.

"Come on over to the house. Mother baked some of her famous apple pie. Just for you."

He ate supper there that evening. Then he went to the Hotel and took a room. He threw a twenty dollar gold piece on the counter.

"The best room in the hotel," was what he said.

For the next week he bought the best of everything in town — from a new saddle and horse to a complete outfit. And every purchase was paid with twenty dollar gold pieces. Bill Hoffman, owner of the Centerville Livery Establishment was worried.

"Something is wrong," he told Bob Atkins. "I have been doing a lot of figuring about what must have happened. Lem and the two of us held up the stage. It was a perfect setting. Jim had been saying a lot of things he should never have said. Ed and Hi heard him talking.

They swore to the truth. Lem was killed in Los Almos. Think he talked before he died."

"Assuming all you say is true," pointed out Bob Atkins, "Lem didn't know where we hid the gold pieces. They are still there in that old well."

"Then where did Jim get the gold pieces? He's been spending them like mad. Maybe Lem got word somehow to Jim about our hiding place. Maybe he followed us. I bet the gold isn't there any more," insisted an angry Bill Hoffman. "Only thing we can do is to ride out. Meet you tomorrow morning at eight by the south turn in the road. Be certain you aren't followed."

The next morning the two men met and rode out to an old deserted house. From time to time they saw distant riders but that didn't bother them at all. They went to the well. Bill Hoffman climbed down a rope and brought up a bag. It was filled with the loot. Then he replaced the bag and the two rode back to town. That evening each was arrested by Sheriff Ben Corning and the Prince Albert Kid.

"What's the charge?" demanded Bill Hoffman.

"Holding up the stage coach, and letting an innocent man go to jail for your crime. We found the gold in the well. So you might as well confess."

"But nobody followed us," interrupted Bob Atkins. "We say nothing."

"You better look at these spyglasses they use aboard ship," explained the Prince Albert Kid. "We have been watching everybody entering and leaving town."

Bob Atkins told everything. How the carelessly spoken statement of Jim Platt had given them the idea about robbing the stage. Jim Platt wanted to know something.

"Who first got the idea I was innocent?"

"I did," smiled Ed Marvell. "I testified truthfully to what you had said. Sometimes we all overlook the obvious. After you were sent to jail I wrote a letter to the Prince Albert Kid. You had boasted that YOU would hold up the coach. I realized it meant YOU ALONE! Then Lem was killed in a gunfight with a peace officer. He confessed being in on the robbery and cleared you. But he didn't live long enough to name his two accomplices."

Outside the sheriff's office, Jim Platt walked side by side with Ed Marvell.

"Will you be my best man at the wedding?" he asked. "I'm going to marry my girl next month."

"Sure," was the one word reply. And then as an after thought he added: "But I guess the real best man is the Prince Albert Kid."

real solid LIVE MUSCLE.
